

About the Association

Background

The Communications Association of Hong Kong (CAHK), formerly known as Internet & Telecom Association of Hong Kong, is a non-profit-making organisation incorporated on 27 May 1983 following the announcement of deregulation of the telecommunication products and services. CAHK is the association for Hong Kong's communications industry, with responsibilities across broadcasting, wireline and wireless communications, and other relevant business sectors in the domain of information and communications technology (ICT).

The Main Objectives Of The Association

- to organise formal and informal functions to provide networking and sharing opportunities for members of the Association to meet each other and explore business opportunities;
- to promote the awareness of and discussion on issues affecting all areas of the communications industry, and safeguard the interests and intellectual property rights of its members;
- to encourage the industry to develop and comply with the industry code of practice, technical and operational standards to maintain high standards of business and professional ethics and to discourage and suppress mal-practices that may be harmful to the communications industry as well as to businesses, community and the public at large;
- to provide legitimate and competent representations for various HKSAR Government Departments or other organisations for the communications industry;
- to educate, improve and elevate the technical and general knowledge of persons engaged in, or about to engage in the trade or the promotion of the communications industry or in any employment in connection with the industry;
- to produce useful information, research and statistics in connection with the communications industry, and to promote the industry image and members of the Association to local and overseas industry.
